
Guest Lecture Series: Geographies of (in)justice

“Regeneration not speculation” says a billboard in Belfast. “Unfair taxation = social anger” says some graffiti in the streets of Paris after a day of “yellow vests” demonstrations. The calls for more justice are flourishing in public space. Yet their diversity and complexity require social scientists to rethink their own conceptualisations of socio-spatial production. In spring 2019, the guest lecture series entitled “Geographies of (in)justice”, organised by the Institute of Geography and Spatial Planning at the University of Luxembourg, focused on the spatial dimension of injustices. It sought to contribute to the ongoing debate by questioning how injustices are expressed, put into words, constructed as social and political problems, and how researchers develop conceptual and empirical tools to grasp them.

This lecture series was organised by Cyril Blondel and Estelle Evrard (University of Luxembourg) in the framework of the research undertaken for the European project RELOCAL. The guest lecture series was organised in partnership with JSSJ.

The four lectures presented here as part of this JSSJ public space are listed below:

Thursday, April 11th 2019

Does spatial proximity erase social inequalities? “Social mix” and gay-friendliness in gentrified areas (France and the USA)

Sylvie Tissot, University of Vincennes-Saint Denis Paris 8, UMR CRESSPA (France)

Wednesday, May 15th 2019

(De)coloniality of knowledge: questioning vantage points, delinking from rules, troubling institutions

Madina Tlostanova, Linköping University (Sweden)

Tuesday, May 21th 2019

The “yellow vest” movement in the light of the socio-spatial inequalities in France

Aurélien Delpirou, Ecole d'urbanisme de Paris / Lab'Urba (France)

Wednesday, June 12th 2019

Solidarity economics and local development: the case of ‘post-conflict’ Belfast

Brendan Murtagh, Queen University Belfast (Ireland)

The video recordings are available here.